

Evliya Çelebi

Hello, future scientists!

I am Evliya Çelebi. I lived in Istanbul 400 years ago. Do you enjoy traveling? I absolutely love it! Exploring new places and getting to know different cultures are things I cherish. That's why I became known as the most famous traveler of the Ottoman Empire. As a child, I read many books and imagined different places.

I enjoyed chatting with my father and his friends, listening to their travel adventures. While listening to them, I would dream and think that one day, I would go to those places. My imagination was vast. My first journey, of course, was around Istanbul, exploring every corner of its streets, meeting new people, and recording what I saw and learned in my notebook. I didn't only explore Istanbul but also traveled extensively in Anatolia and many cities abroad, including Egypt, Arabia, India, Iran, the Balkans, Russia, and many more. I entered local shops and conversed with the people there, learning a lot in the process. Thanks to my travels,

I wrote a 10-volume travelogue. This work was significant in terms of cultural history. In this masterpiece, I didn't only write about the places I visited but also narrated the stories of the people, the natural beauties, different cultures, and the new information I discovered. Because for me, traveling wasn't just about seeing new places; learning new things was also an integral part of my journey and exploration.

If, like me, you have a broad imagination and love exploring new places, maybe one day you can embark on a world tour. But I have a piece of advice for you! First, get to know your neighborhood and city well. Then you can continue your journey by exploring our country!
